Strategic Thinking & Direction: Getting Ready

Intended Audience

All are welcome: board members, executive directors, management staff, volunteers and others who want to work strategically and focus on priorities to create community impact and sustainability.

The Role of Strategic Thinking

During challenging times, leaders look for answers and think about the need for strategic direction and plans. Yet, concerns often arise about how much time or money it will involve, making it hard to start!

The process of strategic thinking is more important than the final plan. Dedicated, intentional time is the key ingredient to help organizations with strategic focus and direction. Time and participation are more critical than money and outside facilitators.

Strategic direction and plans can be complex and costly undertakings or relatively simple and inexpensive. Join Becky Schueller and your nonprofit colleagues to learn more. Bring back resources, ideas, and tools to identify strategic focus areas and priorities that support your essential work.

Learn A Simple Process To Support Strategic Work

- ❖ What if there were a simple framework to help you determine your most important organizational priorities?
- ❖ How can you support your board, chief executive, and staff in proactively responding to new realities and improve engagement and participation?
- ❖ What can be done internally to move forward with identifying strategic focus areas and decide if you need an external facilitator?
- ❖ Who should be at the table when setting strategic direction?
